

Judge Joseph C. Mattingly, 76, Dies; Funeral Rites Monday

Judge Joseph Carberry Mattingly, 76, who was reversed but once by the Court of Appeals in his 19 years on the bench, died yesterday at his Oxon Hill home.

Judge Mattingly, whose kindly advice carried many a young lawyer through his first trials and who exemplified the "Gentlemen of the Old School," was a native of Washington but moved to Oxon Hill with his parents while still a child.

He was graduated from old Georgetown Preparatory School and later received his bachelor and master degrees in law from Georgetown Law School. Following his graduation he became associated with the late Snowden Hill and the late James Rogers with law offices in the old Fendall Building. He was elected judge of the Prince Georges County Circuit Court and took his place on the bench at Upper Marlboro December 27, 1923, and at the end of his 15-year term was reelected and sworn in December 27, 1938.

He served until July 1, 1941, when he retired at the age of 70 and resumed practice of law. He had been a member of the District Bar Association for 53 years last May.

The judge is survived by three daughters, Miss Anne Mattingly and Miss Eleanor Mattingly, who resided with him at the Oxon Hill home, and Mrs. J. Frank Maguire of Arlington, Va., and a sister, Miss Martina Mattingly, of Washington.

Requiem mass will be said at 9:30 a. m. Monday in St. Ignatius Church, Oxon Hill. Burial will be in the church cemetery.

Among the honorary pallbearers will be the judges he served with, including Chief Judge Ogle Marbury of the Maryland Court of Appeals; former Chief Judge Walter Mitchell, Chief Judge William M. Loker, Judge Charles C. Marbury and Judge John B. Gray, jr.
